

ANU Chaplaincy

If you have a personal concern and are not sure who you can speak to, chaplains can help. Chaplains are a resource available to university students and staff facing any number of issues. Maybe you're feeling the strain of managing things in isolation. Or you have some trouble in your studies or work or relationships, or are seeking spiritual guidance. These are all things the ANU chaplains can help you with.

Keep in mind everything you tell a chaplain remains private, except where we must report information about harm. Chaplains hold what you tell them in confidence. Chaplains don't keep records, and they are bound to keep confidential what you discuss together. It's safe to share information with chaplains to get things off your chest. That means you can speak with a university chaplain about personal matters without fear they will tell it to anyone.

No matter your concern or need, your chaplain will listen and support you.

The Chaplaincy service is endorsed by the University and is provided by a multifaith team of chaplains, including members of Anglican, Catholic, Muslim, Baptist, Hindu, Jewish, Baha'i, Humanist and Uniting Church traditions. We are women and men, lay and clergy, from different cultural, linguistic and educational backgrounds, serving mainly on a volunteer basis.

The ANU Chaplaincy is located on level four in the Di Riddell Student Centre in the Kambri precinct and is available for meeting chaplains and for informal prayer and meditation when open. Our chaplains can also come to you or speak over the phone.
