Thank you for all you made possible in 2020

Your support provided certainty in a very challenging year.

This year marks the 75th anniversary of our University. Thank you for contributing to our story so far, and we look forward to celebrating our milestone together.

As ANU moves towards our vision for 2025 and beyond, we are grateful to you for being key partners in our growth and future.

Boosted by our donors’ generosity, the Kambri Scholars program proudly welcomed new Indigenous students to ANU. These students would not have been able to attend university without such generous support.

Together, we will advance research that transforms society. We will continue to provide a world-class experience for our students. We will strive to achieve equity – within ANU and in society – and we will continue to meet our unique responsibilities as Australia’s national university.

Thank you for all that you make possible.

The Hon Julie Bishop
Chancellor

Professor Brian P. Schmidt
AC FAA FRS
Vice-Chancellor and President
Thank you for your support. You are helping increase the number of Indigenous students at ANU, who will go on to fulfilling careers and lives.

Over the past five years, donors have given generously to The ANU Fund. In late 2020, $500,000 was distributed from The ANU Fund to support the Kambri Scholars program.

“Supporting impactful programs like Kambri Scholars will have the effect of providing continued support and career pathways across generations of First Nations people. University education provides a critical role in enablement and self-determination.”

— PHILLIP JENKINSON
CEO RAIDAM SOLUTIONS & JAMIE O'REILLY, FOUNDER, DVULN—DONORS TO THE KAMBRI SCHOLARS PROGRAM

When academic institutions like ANU try to bridge the gap for Indigenous students through supportive programs, they are providing a foot in the door for so many who otherwise might not have even considered university a place for them. Thank you so incredibly much for your generosity and kindness.”

The impact of COVID-19 was felt by all in the ANU community, with many of our staff facing unexpected financial hardship. The Care for your Colleagues appeal was launched to mobilise financial support, above and beyond the University’s existing programs, for fellow staff members experiencing such hardship. When Professor Matthew Colless invited University staff to help out, the ANU community came forward to help our colleagues in need.

“The emergency fund has been a very timely mental and physical support. Your generosity has helped people like me to continue seeking a better life during a very difficult time. Thank you.”

— AN ANU CASUAL STAFF MEMBER

“I have always been proud of being a part of the ANU community, but this support has made me the University’s lifelong brand ambassador. Thank you to all the donors.”

Giving students stability

A university education changes lives. In 2020, due to the impact of COVID-19, many students had to make difficult choices between continuing their education and addressing basic needs. According to a report by the ANU School of Research & Methods, 65.1 per cent of 18- to 24-year-olds were feeling anxious or worried due to the impact of COVID-19.

When we called on our community to help, alumni and donors responded with immense generosity by giving to the ANU Student Urgent Relief Fund. This particularly helped international students, students from rural and remote areas, and those who are also carers. It supported a variety of expenses like house rent, groceries, internet access, and urgent travel needs.

The generosity has helped ANU students to keep learning and stay connected with the ANU community.

“I had some of my best years at ANU. Our students are the future leaders of the world and we need to make sure they can enjoy the full university experience.”

Easing the landscape for difficult birds

The unprecedented weather conditions of 2020 were exceptionally challenging for ‘difficult birds’ — Australia’s most endangered birds. The added threat of climate change has made the iconic superb parrot particularly vulnerable. These much-loved birds need hollows in large trees to protect their nests. Potential shortages of suitable hollows in landscapes where large trees are rare pose a threat to parrot populations.

Supported by donors, the Difficult Birds Research Group at ANU has developed a GPS backpack-like device that attaches to the parrots. This will help researchers understand the movement of the birds, and identify and protect the rare and valuable nesting trees. By better maintaining the landscape, this research could offer a helping hand to superb parrots.

National university supported by our global community

Our ANU alumni are a true reflection of our University’s values. From helping members of the ANU community affected by the pandemic, to supporting students with the greatest financial need, our international alumni have made an impact right through 2020.

When Sarah Backhouse (BJapS ’95, BEc ’95), President of The ANU Foundation USA, heard about the challenges being faced by the ANU community due to COVID-19, she felt compelled to provide support.

“I wanted to contribute to the relief funds for the students and staff at ANU to help ease the economic hardship caused by COVID-19,” said Sarah. “As an ANU alumna, I am grateful for the education and experiences I gained, and wanted to do my small part to pay it forward to the ANU community.”

The generosity of the ANU community – here in Australia and across the world – has helped to support 58 staff with $96,500 disbursed through the Care for your Colleagues appeal.

Jane MacLeod (BA ’83, LLB ’85) feels lucky to have been part of a generation that received a free university education. Along with a group of other UK-based ANU alumni, Jane has provided funding for the London Alumni Scholarship, to help talented students overcome financial barriers and enjoy a fulfilling university experience at ANU.

“Our world is facing enormous challenges, and we will only address them for the benefit of everyone if more of us are able to access and value the intellectual freedom that thrives in the university environment.”

Sarah and Jane represent one of the key strengths of ANU – our generous global community that actively cares for and supports our staff and students here in Australia.

“I wanted to contribute to the relief funds for the students and staff at ANU to help ease the economic hardship caused by COVID-19.”

Renewing University House – the heart of ANU

“It is building number one on campus,” says Peter Kanowski, Master of House at University House.

University House is the ceremonial heart of ANU, and truly one of Canberra’s unique locations and experiences. Modelled on the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge, it is where the University meets and celebrates, and also where guests and visitors are treated to a boutique hotel experience.

The hailstorm of 2020, followed by heavy rain, caused significant damage to University House, including to its original tiles and glass, and the electrical infrastructure.

“In the minds of the academics and senior public servants who created ANU, University House fulfilled an important role,” says Peter. “It was the only place where graduate students and academics lived, and the place for the exchange of ideas for the political and intellectual community of Canberra. It continues to be a home to visitors from around Australia and the world.”

University House’s heritage-listed character reflects the excellence of architect Brian Wilson, designers Fred Ward and Derek Wrigley, and botanist and forester Lindsay Pryor. Over the years, members and friends have given generously to enhance its art collection, making it a shining showcase of Australian art.

In late 2019, the University approved refurbishment of University House to renew the building while respecting its heritage. The extreme weather events and pandemic of 2020, however, put a hold on these planned refurbishments. For the first time in its history, University House was closed completely. Our donor community has now come forward to support renewal efforts.

“Our donors, friends and ANU alumni have a vital role to play in restoring the building to its iconic status as an emblem of mid-twentieth century design,” says Peter.

“With the right amount of support, we hope to refurbish it into a twenty-first century expression worthy of its standing in 1954, when it opened. We are grateful to our donors for helping in our efforts to renew the heart of academic and social life at ANU.”

Saving an Australian icon

In January 2020, koalas affected by bushfires arrived at ANU in desperate need of special care. Thanks to the generosity of our donors, they received that care and two have been released back into their habitat at Two Thumbs Wildlife Sanctuary.

“We will examine how fire affects the nutritional quality of koala habitats and eucalypt trees,” says ANU researcher Dr Kara Youngentob. “Our research is critical for the development of strategies that minimise bushfire impacts on wildlife.”

This research was made possible by a $100,000 donation from Two Thumbs Wildlife Sanctuary and its trustee, James Fitzgerald. A partnership with the Minderoo Foundation, through a donation of $257,000, is further supporting the research.

With koalas facing habitat loss and extinction, this research is an important part of protecting the species.

A lasting gift of friendship

John McNaught wanted to leave a legacy that would support cancer research. The cancer treatment John had undergone disfigured his face, which caused him to feel self-conscious in public.

Becoming a member of the Springbank Circle introduced John to a new community and gave him a sense of belonging. He rediscovered life at ANU through a calendar of social events, from classical music shows to lunches.

John also gained a new friendship with Rachel Hunter (Development Manager, Gift & Estate Planning) from ANU Advancement. He expressed his happiness at reconnecting with ANU.

“It has been a great joy for me, to reconnect with ANU. I have always been grateful for the gifts ANU has given me, both as a former student and employee, and now in my retirement.”

Before John passed, Rachel shared with him how he had inspired her to become a donor. Such is the lasting impact of their friendship.

Backing the next generation of rural leaders

Rural inventor and philanthropist George Alexander AM set up the George Alexander Foundation in 1972, and it continues to support undergraduate scholarships at ANU. The Foundation aims to reduce some of the significant geographic barriers to tertiary education faced by rural and regional students.

Current scholarship recipient, Simone De Nys, always had an interest in international relations, languages and politics. The scholarship enabled her to move from Townsville in North Queensland to Canberra, to study a Bachelor of Arts & International Security Studies at ANU.

“I decided to pursue a degree that catered to all my interests,” says Simone.

With the security of a scholarship, Simone could pursue international study opportunities at Ritsumeikan University in Kyoto, Japan, and a semester exchange at the University of Geneva in Switzerland.

Simone believes in giving back to her university community, and is a member of the executive for the Rural, Remote and Regional Students’ Society (RRRS), a social support network for ANU students.

“I am infinitely grateful to The George Alexander Foundation for all of their help, support and understanding throughout my time at university,” said Simone.
The ANU Foundation

Thank you for your support and the trust you have put in ANU through your giving. We are committed to honouring this trust by ensuring your gift is managed in the most ethical and transparent manner.

The ANU Foundation is the governance framework for all gifts made to the University. It ensures that ANU maintains the highest standards in relation to its fundraising activities and that gifts made to the University are properly used and appropriately accounted for.

The ANU Foundation Board is the key oversight body for the ANU Foundation, advising ANU Council and the Vice-Chancellor on the governance, management and performance of the University’s fundraising activities. This ensures monies are disbursed and activities are supported in line with donor wishes and for the life of each gift.
